9. REFLECTIVE REPORTS

Critical Analysis

Reflective Reports' stand as a common assignment in UK universities, encapsulating a form of writing where students critically reflect on given subjects. As the name implies, this written piece encapsulates a student's thoughtful analysis, summarizing their reflections on a theoretical or practical theme. While content may vary across disciplines, a crucial aspect involves students spotlighting their personal role, such as identifying mistakes, addressing calculation errors, recognizing weak concepts, and pinpointing areas of the syllabus that require further revision.

This genre of writing not only imparts the skill of self-reflection but also enhances students' ability to contextualize their performance. Proficient practitioners of 'Reflective Reports' develop heightened awareness of their learning journey, enabling them to articulate their experiences effectively for both academic and non-academic audiences. This proficiency not only contributes to academic success but also fosters a profound understanding of personal growth & development. Conduct Guidelines: Following every 'Consolidated Assessment Test (CAT)'.
